Silvana Pieri and Claudio Monaci bought their beautiful estate in 1950. It is named after the famous Piancornello volcanic hill, on the southern slope of Montalcino, where they own ten hectares. A unique area overlooking Monte Amiata on the Orcia and Asso rivers, it has well-drained steep slopes and is rich in stone and rock. Combined with the Mediterranean climate and the relatively low altitude (about 250 meters), it creates perfect conditions for gutsy, full-bodied Sangiovese wines, which are fermented in steel and wood, and aged in barriques and mid-sized casks. Piancornello's selection put in a first-rate performance. The 2015 Rosso is, without a doubt, the most aromatically captivating, with its hints of light fruit, mint, pistils and citrus peel; it's just a bit supple on the palate. The 2012 Brunello is just as brilliant in its suite of spices, though more potent and dry as well.
